It is important because: (1) high value horticultural export crops receive relatively high chemical inputs that can result in chemical residue on the products, a primary reason why such crops may not be accepted by importing countries, and (2) transitional systems are particularly vulnerable to pest damage as many such systems occur on marginal land. The major goal of this project is to improve the well being of farmers in developing countries to produce, utilize and market agricultural commodities through cost-effective and environmentally sustainable methods. Funded and implemented by USAID/EGAT/NRM.	Trade-Related Agriculture	2,050,000
