Economic Policy Reform and Competitiveness Project - Mongolia	The Economic Policy Reform and Competitiveness Project (EPRC), conducted by the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID), works with relevant government officials in Mongolia to promote macroeconomic policy, energy sector reforms, and public dialogue. The project also includes work with businesses to promote their competitiveness in international markets. Major successes in the area of trade capacity building include the launching of a tourism portal that will make it possible to plan, book, and pay for a vacation in Mongolia from anywhere in the world, and facilitating the signing of cashmere production contracts worth over $3 million. Mongolia Trade and Competitiveness Activities	Mongolia's economic reforms during the past 15 years are significant, but much work remains to expand Mongolia's commercial interaction with the rest of the world. Assistance provided under this amendment will be used to help organize and streamline Mongolia's trade policy and regulatory regimes, with fewer burdens on businesses trying to engage in international trade. It will also be used to develop Mongolian business capacity to market products abroad.	Tourism Sector Development		304,618

Standards Development - Mongolia	The U.S. Trade and Development Agency is funding an orientation visit by Mongolian delegates focusing on the technical and policy aspects of standards, certification, and conformity assessment procedures. The Government of Mongolia has demonstrated an interest in improving its standardization regime, and would like to do so in a way that complements standards in the United States. Such a harmonization will increase trade capacity between the two countries and make Mongolia more competitive.	Other Trade Facilitation		66,301
